AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS OPPOSES U.S. AMBASSADOR TO VATICAN

The American Jewish Congress voted to oppose President Truman's nomination of an Ambassador to the Vatican. After a debate of forty-five minutes at the closing session of its biennial convention in the New Yorker Hotel, in New York, the 500 delegates at the meeting approved a resolution urging the President to recall his proposed appointment of Gen. Mark W. Clark to the Vatican "in the interests of fundamental American democratic principles and of inter-religious harmony and accord within this country."

The delegates represent ten major national religious and Zionist affiliated organizations with a membership of 1,200,000. The opposition to the resolution was based on the expediency of taking a stand at this time on the controversial issue. Only a few voted to refer the resolution to the body's executive committee for action at a later time.

Speakers urged the delegates to assume the leadership among Jewish organizations in opposition to the appointment. Dr. Horace Kallen, Professor of Philosophy at the New School for Social Research, said that a Vatican Ambassador might become a disservice to the Roman Catholics of the U.S. in that "the princes of the church" might be considered agents of another country and thus have to register as alien agents. "I don't want to see representatives of the Vatican put in the position of political agents," he said.

Shad Polier, vice-president and chairman of the Congress' committee on law and social action, said that Protestant organizations co-operating on civil rights with the Congress were waiting for Jewish organizations to speak out along [illegible] opposition to the [illegible] adopted a resolution on the separation of church and state, which said that the Congress was deeply concerned with the maintenance of the principle of such separation and with the preservation of religious liberty.

The Congress voted to continue its opposition to any impairment of the principle of separation "through encroachments of sectarianism on the public school system in any form or the allocation of public funds for any sectarian purpose." It also voted "to continue to defend the rights of the exercise of religious liberty of all Americans wherever these rights are threatened or violated."

The convention criticised America's recent record on civil rights. It accused the executive department of the Federal Government of "failure to take the many measures within its power to reduce discrimination." The convention also affirmed its faith in the continued security of American Jews under American freedom and in Jewry's capacity to develop in this country a deeply meaningful Jewish life."

Other resolutions adopted called for maximum support for the United Jewish Appeal and the Israel bond drive, affirmed the support of the Congress for the pioneer movement in Israel designed to help furnish manpower and skills required for the tasks of state building, and sharply condemned the failure of the United States Senate to ratify the United Nations Convention on Genocide.

Lloyd K. Garrison, former chairman of the War Labor Board, warned that in the American Nation's "zeal to stamp out the heresy of Communism we have let loose forces that are threatening the very freedoms we seek to save." Stressing that the United States must guard against the threat of the internal and external aggression, Mr. Garrison said, however, that witch-hunting "is once again riding high and it is doing terrible things to innocent people and to the foundation of freedom in America."

Mr. Polier criticised the U.S. Congress for its failure during the

Urges Bunche For Peace Job In Palestine

James G. McDonald, former United States Ambassador to Israel, suggested the replacement of the three-man Palestine Conciliation Commission with one-man conciliator, Mr. McDonald spoke at a dinner in New York at the Astor Hotel, arranged in honor of his sixty-fifth birthday by the merchandise managers and buyers division of the Greater New York Committee for State of Israel bonds. He received a scroll signed by the leaders of the Israeli Government in appreciation for his "devoted service to the people of Israel."

Mr. McDonald told the 500 business leaders at the dinner that the Palestine Conciliation Commission had failed to effect a peace between Israel and the Arab states. He asserted that the Commission, despite the able and devoted American representation on it, was doomed from the beginning to failure. The American, French and Turkish members each represented his own government rather than the United Nations, he declared, according to the New York Times.

Mr. McDonald, who is chairman of the Advisory Council of the $500,000,000 State of Israel Bond issue, suggested that Dr. Ralph J. Bunche would be an excellent choice to replace the three-man Commission. He declared that Dr. Bunche, "who single-handedly performed the near miracle of persuading to sign binding armistices," should be urged to resume his work of conciliation at the point where he was displaced three years ago.

"Only through the resumption of his efforts or through the leadership of another single individual of comparable talents, if one can be found willing to undertake so difficult a task," said Mr. McDonald, [illegible] hope of breaking the prolonged [illegible] between Tel Aviv and at least some of the Arab capitals."

Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion of Israel and other leaders sent birthday greetings to Mr. McDonald. Bartley Crum, former member of the Anglo-American Commission on Palestine, was another speaker. He praised Mr. McDonald for his effort to promote the sale of State of Israel Bonds

Indian Jews Resent Color Bar In Israel

One hundred and fifty Jewish immigrants from India, including some twenty children, settled down to their second night on the pavements outside the Jewish Agency headquarters in Tel Aviv in a sit-down strike by which they hoped to oblige the agency to send them back to India.

The Indian Jews, who have been there two years and been settled in the Beersheba region, contended they had been lured by false promises of a good life in Israel and had been obliged to do heavy manual labor in Israel instead of following their traditional trades. They added that they had been subjected to discrimination as "blacks."

In a letter signed by ninety persons, included forty-eight children, addressed to Jewish Agency officials, they said: "You brought us here—we want you to send us back."

It was the first time in the three-year history of Israel that an entire group of immigrants had demanded to be returned to their country of origin. Individuals who did not adjust themselves to life there have, of course, returned in many instances. It was also the first time that an organized group had made a charge that they had encountered a color line in Israel, although individual Jewish immigrants from Yemen and North Africa have often complained, reports the New York Times.

"In Bombay, we were told that there is no color bar in Israel," the Indian Jews wrote the agency, "but in a shop in Beersheba we were told that we should eat only black bread as we were black and the white bread was only for white Jews."

The Indian Jews also maintained that their children had not been provided an education and had been obliged to attend a Roman Catholic mission school. They said they had been excluded from jobs, such as drivers and mechanics, be-

U.N. Sees Arabs, Jews Too Rigid In Dispute

The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine announced in Paris its decision to end current mediation efforts in the Arab-Israeli dispute because of what it called the "rigid positions" maintained by both sides.

The three-member peace body, composed of representatives of the United States, France and Turkey, informed both sides that it considered continuation of the talks here, begun in mid-September, as useless. This view will be reported to the General Assembly, which must decide whether it is worth while to continue the commission's mandate after nearly three years of fruitless negotiations in Paris, in New York, Switzerland, and the Middle East.

The chief obstacle to progress at this and the other conferences was the problem of Arab refugees, who are estimated to number 400,000 to 800,000. Egypt, Syria, Jordan and Lebanon insisted on strict observance of a long-standing Security Council resolution, giving refugees the right to return to land that is now Israeli territory, from which they had been driven by war.

Israel has refused to repatriate these refugees, and instead has urged their resettlement. The most recent exchange of views among the disputants and the commission — the Arabs refuse to sit with the Israelis—re-emphasized the conflicts on this point and on those concerning compensation for Arab property in Israel, mutual unblocking of financial accounts and territorial questions, according to the New York Times.

U.S. Agrees With Jews On Rommel Film Ban

The State Department said it had "made plain" to Twentieth Century-Fox that its film, "The Desert Fox," should not be shown in Germany as it tended "to glorify the career of a Nazi general," Field Marshal Erwin Rommel.

But Anthony Muto, Washington representative of the film company, declared that John J. McCloy, American High Commissioner in Germany, had read the script of the picture before it was produced and permitted the shooting of many background scenes in Germany, says the New York Herald Tribune.

"The picture has been shown in England for several weeks and has had a terrific box office," Mr. Muto said. "It makes no attempt to glorify Rommel. It is a factual story. It even contains a statement by Winston Churchill, and certainly no one can say he is a friend of the Nazis. The German part of the film could never have been made without the co-operation of Mr. McCloy. And much earlier, some highly placed people in the State Department said they had no objection to the film.

Mr. Muto said he was not at liberty to identify these "highly placed people." He said that Albert Cornfield, European manager of his company, and Robert Kreier, German manager, had been conferring with Mr. McCloy about the picture but that he had not been advised of the result. Mr. McCloy had asked to see the picture when it was completed and Mr. Muto said he assumed this had been done.

(At Hollywood, Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production at Twentieth Century-Fox, told The United Press, according to the New York Herald Tribune, that "Desert Fox" was produced "with the full authorization and co-operation of the State Department.")

The State Department made public the partial text of a letter it sent to Paul Ginsburg, national commander of the Jewish War Veterans, one of the Jewish groups protesting that the film "glorifies" the late Nazi field marshal.

The letter, signed by Geoffrey W. Lewis, acting director of the Bureau of German Affairs, said:

"The department shares your concern over the production at this time of a motion picture tending to glorify the career of a Nazi general. You may be interested in knowing that when the department first learned that Twentieth Century-Fox intended to produce such a film, it pointed out to representatives of the com-

Major Groups Take Advice To Reorganize Community Relations Work

Representatives of major Jewish national organizations and local agencies unanimously approved, at Atlantic City, a report calling for a reorganization of activities among Jewish groups engaged in community relations work.

The report, adopted at the final session of the ninth annual conference of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, the coordinating body of six national Jewish organizations and twenty-seven local groups, was submitted by a special committee of the Council. It was based on a study made by Prof. Robert M. MacIver, Columbia University sociologist.

Action was taken after three days of sharp debate among representatives of the local groups and the national organizations; the American Jewish Committee; the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith; the Union of American Hebrew Congregations; Jewish War Veterans; American Jewish Congress; and the Jewish Labor Committee.

The American Jewish Committee and the Anti-Defamation League had dissented from the report. However, the conference adopted a set of amendments submitted after a caucus among representatives of the American Jewish Committee, the Anti-Defamation League, and a group of local agencies.

One amendment provided that the Council's special committee present its recommendations on the reallocation of functions among Jewish groups to the executive committee of the Council. If there be less than a unanimous vote by the executive committee, the amendment provided for the submission of the recommendations to the next conference for a majority vote no later than next June. The amendment, however, reaffirmed the right of the Council's affiliated agencies to dissent from any majority vote.

Recommendations called for closer relationship between national and local community relation groups; provided for a strengthened role of the National Community Relations Advisory Council; a study of new procedures to finance the activities in Jewish community relations work.

The Anti-Defamation League and the American Jewish Committee had voiced strong opposition to the MacIver report when it was submitted to the Council. The report had called for a redistribution of functions among Jewish groups interested in civil liberties, interfaith activities, labor and veterans' programs. The American Jewish Congress, the Jewish Labor Committee, Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Jewish War Veterans had supported the recommendations of the report.

Meanwhile, Isaiah Minkoff, executive director of the council, called on the constituent organizations to continue their work for "extension of civil rights and the preservation of civil liberties as an integral factor in the defense of our nation."

Irving Kane, of Cleveland, Ohio, was re-elected chairman of the Council; Sidney Hollander, of Baltimore; and Bernard H. Trager, of Bridgeport, re-elected vice chairmen; David L. Ullman, of Philadelphia, re-elected treasurer; and Julius Kiser, of Indianapolis, was elected secretary.

Bank of Montreal's Report For Year Shows New Records

A customer's provocative question, "What do you do with our two billion dollars?", introduces this year's Bank of Montreal report on the highlights of its annual statement, just published. In answering this pertinent query, the B of M continues the course it has pioneered in Canadian banking over the past seven years, which has been to present the meaning behind the figures of its annual statement in everyday language.

The message begins by pointing out that more than half of the record-breaking total of $2,085,000,000 now on deposit at B of M branches consists of the savings of private citizens. It emphasizes that these two billion dollars, because of the various uses to which they are put, act as a powerful force in helping to provide a better future for every Canadian.

All of the figures dealt with are of general interest. They are accompanied by straight forward explanations, and bright little thumbnail sketches illustrate the main points. In this way, the difficulty of understanding a financial statement is overcome, and the reader can quickly form a clear idea of the part played by the bank in the economic life of the country, and of the part he himself plays by saving.

LOANS INCREASED, INVESTMENTS DOWN

Loans this year top the 1950 year-end figure of $596 million by over $50 million, despite "a conscientious effort to hold down non-defence lending in co-operation with the government's anti-inflationary policy." Covering business, government and personal borrowing, this new record of financial assistance largely reflects the continuing growth of Canada's production.

The bank's traditionally liquid position has been maintained, with 72 per cent of its public liabilities represented by quickly available assets. Of these liquid assets, the most important is $977,000,000 in government and other public securities. This represents a decrease of $53 million and is largely a reflection of the corresponding increase in loans. Total resources, at $2,221,000,000, compare well with 1950's $2,190,000,000.

EARNINGS UP SLIGHTLY, TAXES EXCEED DIVIDENDS

After payment of all operating expenses, including staff salaries, cost-of-living bonuses and pension-fund contributions, plus allowance for depreciation of bank premises and provision for contingencies, the B of M reports earnings of $10,356,000. This represents an increase of $819,000 over the 1950 figure, but, with a rise in taxes of $1,407,000, net earnings for 1951 are down $686,000 from a year ago. After deduction of taxes, net earnings amount to $5,865,000.

Federal and provincial taxes, at $5,001,000, exceed the amount which the bank distributed in dividends. These totalled $4,322,000, a return of 4.87 per cent on the shareholders' funds, which amount to $88,534,000. This money—which is the difference between what the bank owes its depositors and others and what it has to meet these obligations — is made up partly of funds subscribed by the shareholders and partly of earnings which have been retained in the business year by year after the payment of dividends to shareholders.

U.S. AGREES WITH JEWS

pany the unfortunate consequences that might result both here and abroad. The representatives of Twentieth Century-Fox decided, however, to proceed with the production, arguing that Rommel had never been implicated in the crimes of the Nazis, that his military conduct was above reproach and that he had broken with Hitler during the war.

"As you probably are aware, the department has no control over the selection of motion pictures brought into Germany by American producers. We have made plain to Twentieth Century-Fox, however, that we feel the reaction to this film in Germany would be most unfortunate, and that we hope it will not be circulated there."

Earlier, before the letter to Mr. Ginsburg had been released, a State Department spokesman said the picture portrays Rommel "in a favorable light" and that the department believes its showing in Germany would have unfortunate repercussions because it revives the idea of successful Nazi militarism.

cause they were from India and had been forced to take work at heavy manual labor far from their homes in Beersheba. When they applied for quarters nearer their work, they said, they were refused, although a "white man" with "protection" was immediately transferred to Bat-Yam, near Tel Aviv.

"We have waited patiently for the past two years, hoping that things would turn out all right," the letter read. "But our patience is over and we want to go back to India. No more promises of temporary help will convince us of your good intentions."

Jewish Agency officials tried to talk the Indians into going back to Beersheba. The Indians, however, refused to talk of anything except their return to India. They said that there was no color line in India.

If the Agency refused, a spokesman for the Indians said, they would go on hunger strikes, in addition to their sitdown. There are 1,500 Indian Jews in Israel, but only this group has demanded its return. About 25,000 Jews remain in India.

At a dinner for Rabbi Irving Miller, president of the organization, Dr. Nahum Goldmann, co-chairman of the Jewish Agency for Israel, warned that neither Jews throughout the world nor the State of Israel could survive culturally and spiritually without the fullest mutual cooperation.

Dr. Israel Goldstein, chairman of the World Confederation of General Zionists, a member of the American Executive of the Jewish Agency for Israel, and leader of Congregation Bnai Jeshurun, 270 West Eighty-ninth Street, was elected president of the Congress.

Other national officers elected to serve with Dr. Goldstein were Dr. Morton Berman, of Chicago, co-elected chairman of the administrative committee; Shad Polier, of New York, chairman of the executive committee; Benjamin Kalnick, of Great Neck, N. Y., treasurer; and Nathan Edelstein, of Philadelphia, secretary.

Hope Schools In Hampstead Will Admit Jews

A Committee on Discriminatory Practices set up by the Quebec Federation of Home and School Association is investigating reports that the Town of Hampstead in Greater Montreal refuses to admit Jewish children to the Protestant schools in the municipality.

Mrs. E. T. Bourke, of Westmount High Home and School Association, reported for the committee at a meeting of the Council of Representatives of the Federation. She said the committee was seeking clarification of a situation under which about 400 Jewish residents of Hampstead send their children to schools outside the municipality, because any who have applied for admittance to Hampstead schools have been refused.

She said that one Jewish family had recently challenged the right of the Hampstead school board to refuse to educate their child and had been promised that the child would be admitted to kindergarten when a vacancy occurred. She thought this might represent a change of attitude on the part of the school authorities and the citizens of Hampstead and advised that the situation be dealt with in as friendly and understanding a manner as possible.

The report also deplored the refusal of the Protestant School Commission of Outremont to employ Jewish teachers despite the fact that about 80 per cent of the pupils in Outremont Protestant Schools are Jewish. It said that this policy resulted in the loss of education of many high school graduates who could make an important contribution to the teaching profession.

Citrus exports are expected to total 6,500,000 cases during the 1951-52 season, over 30% more than the quantity shipped from Israel during the 1950-51 season, when 4,200,000 cases were exported.

Raincoats for a total of $118,000 have recently been ordered from Israel by U.S. and Canadian importers.

BY J. J. YOSHOR

(Concluded from Last Week)

During these years, Yankel thought of the promise he had made in Russia to Sonia, to his daughter-in-law. He'd been alone with Sonia. Soreh was in another hut with Dovid'l. Sonia lay in her dirty straw cot — it smelled of decay — coughing violently, losing her breath, spitting out blood. Yankel bent over her and touched the hand of his dead son's dying wife.

"Sonia," he said, "we — Soreh and I — we will be father and mother to Dovid'l. He will be a good man, a good Jew."

"You're old," Sonia gasped.

"So we are," Yankel smiled. "When we die, our friends in Komarowo will take him."

"Komarowo? Jews gone."

"What! No Jews in Komarowo? There have been for hundreds of years. There will always be—Jews in Komarowo. I know this must be so. The Nazis could not have changed this."

"Much . . . they have . . . changed. This too!"

"We will find Jews in Komarowo," he assured her. "If not, we will take Dovid'l where there are Jews — to Warsaw."

She was wheezing badly; her lips quivered, unable to summon the wind to speak, but they managed to form one word before she died:

"Pal . . . es . . . tine."

He chewed the end of his beard, his eyes on hers. He nodded. She saw him nod, but it is not likely that she heard him murmur, "Palestine. If not Komarowo, Palestine."

And for three years they had tried Komarowo.

The cart stopped before the narrow gauge track. They emptied out their belongings and laid them out in a little pile. They gave Vassily his money. He grinned at them as he rattled off.

"The train will come soon," said Soreh. "Now nothing will stop us. We're going." In answer, Yankel tilted his head toward the station shanty.

A knot of gray-overcoated men —one would guess by their attire that they were of the Party—were whispering to themselves and intermittently glancing at them. One of the men detached himself from the group and approached them. It was Turek.

Soreh caught at Dovid'l's hand. He started to cry. She bent down. "There's nothing to cry about." Seeing Turek, she straightened up and curtsied weakly. "Good day, honored district sub-administrator."

The official smiled, patting the dimple in his cheek with his furmittened hand. "I am more than that now, but no matter. You're going so you won't need to know."

"We are going," said Soreh.

He turned to Yankel, and stared at him. Yankel said nothing. In the distance, a train whistle screamed. Then Turek spoke, and now he spoke to Yankel in Yiddish: a hesitating, shaky Yiddish, an out-of-practice Yiddish.

"Nu, old man. We haven't much time."

"Yes, Morgenstern, I knew your father. We went to the same rebbi in Lomza. You . . . I saw you when you were bar-mitzvah. That was years ago."

"It was just before the war," snapped Turek. "To me now these are hazy memories. It is as though I have a few tea leaves, only a few. Time is the scalding kettle, always being poured on my tea leaves. The color and the flavor have long gone out of them. Soon even the residue will crumble. Soon I will have no tea leaves, no memories."

"And your father!" Yankel demanded. "Your Jewish father!"

"He is dead. And with him all my Jewishness. You see, no one but you knows. To everyone, I am Polish."

"And for your Judaism you will not risk!"

"I risk enough now," he growled. "I talk to you and my comrades there (he wriggled his shoulder toward the grey-coated men) suspect me. But this is all. When you go, I purge even my colorless, tasteless tea leaves. I shall be pure party. I have to be if I am to ascend the ranks and generally, if one does not ascend, one sinks. I will not sink."

Suddenly Turek roared, "Let me see your papers!" In low tones, he added, "Don't worry! That was for my comrades. Make a show of handing me your papers."

Yankel gave Turek his documents. The train whistle wailed at them, coming closer.

"Why don't you come with us?" Yankel asked.

"To Palestine? Oddly, I sometimes half-wish I could." Unsmiling, he said, "You see I have very evil cosmopolitan tendencies. After you're gone I'll correct them. For my lot is with the new Poland. I love this land, this power—perhaps both. (He handed Yankel back the papers.) You're probably the last person in Poland who knows of my origin. You go and the link to the ghetto breaks."

The train came in, grinding as it slowed down.

"I have to go, old man. But one more thing."

"Your father?"

"No, not of him. Only God can help him and that is not for a party member to speak of. But listen to this, old man. Do you know that that day when you called me Morgenstern, that you took your life into your hands?"

"Yes."

"Do you know that I thought to arrange your death? It would have been easy and I almost decided to."

Yankel crumpled his beard. "Why didn't you?"

"Because I realized in the end that if I killed you, I would brood over it for a lifetime, just as if I killed my father; that in this way you and my father and the ghetto would claim my thoughts, and this only the Party must do. Now you're going. Well, I win."

The train chugged away from the town — slowly as though it, too, were taking a last leave. And the red sun, listless with the emotion of her daily goodbye, lingered as she fell into her slot off her horizon. From the grey wooden huts at the side of the track, there billowed wisps of black smoke, and the smoke also seemed laden with departure.

From the window of the train, Yankel saw these signs, and because of them his heart beat a song of sadness. Then the train flashed past the hill with the windmill. An expectation made Yankel tremble. The hill with the windmill! Of course? It would be after the hill with the windmill; he was sure it would. Gradually the hill leveled off until it converged into a potato field.

Yankel nudged Soreh. He pointed excitedly to the potato field. "Look, Soreh!" he said. "Look! There is the cemetery, the cemetery of the Jews."

Sorek dit not look, nor did she speak. But Dovid'l asked, in Polish. "Where are they?"

Yankel stared at his grandson. He brooded over that pointless, that irrelevant question. Would they never escape that question? How could he, Yankel, know the answer. Perhaps they were in Heaven, perhaps they were in that tropical land on the Mediterranean —some of them.

Dovid'l gazed at him wide-eyed. And again he asked him, "Where are they?"

The skin, that important organ of the human body, contains the sweat glands that help to govern the body temperature and the oil glands that keep the skin soft and pliable. It also reports pain, heat and cold to the brain, as well as indicating symptoms of some diseases, allergies and emotional disturbances. It is essential that the skin be kept clean in order to prevent harbouring harmful bacteria; mild soap and warm water are the safest cleansing agents.

Water sources such as creeks, pools or shallow wells may contain suspended organic matters which pollute the water and render it unfit for human consumption. Deep-well water, which has travelled a considerable distance underground, is usually relatively safe for drinking purposes but it is advisable to have all natural waters tested for purity at regular intervals.

The child who is sent to bed as a punishment, may develop a fear and dislike of bed, thus creating sleeping problems. Depriving him of a meal as a means of discipline is another unwise action. His food is necessary to maintain his growing body and cutting down that nutrition will have more effect upon his health than upon his conscience. Taking away some favorite dessert or special treat may have a more salutary effect, without denying him his necessary food.

What do you do with our Two Billion Dollars?

$2,085,187,091.60, to be exact.

That's what our 1,800,000 customers had on deposit at our 572 branches on October 31st, 1951 — the end of the 134th year of Canada's First Bank.

More than half of this money is made up of the savings of private individuals . . . hard-earned dollars that will give the depositor a backlog of money for future use. And, in B of M care, these two billion dollars are a powerful force working toward a better future for Canada and for all Canadians.

Where does this money go? Well, for instance...

AT THE B of M's 1951 YEAR-END

$646,368,336.93 was on loan to scores of thousands of Canadians in every walk of life . . . to farmers, fishermen, lumbermen, and ranchers . . . to private citizens in all parts of the country . . . to business and industrial enterprises for every kind of production . . . to provincial and municipal governments and school districts. These loans stood at the highest year-end figure in the Bank's history, despite a conscientious effort to hold down non-defence lending in co-operation with the Government's anti-inflationary policy.

$976,950,829.78 was invested in high-grade government bonds and other public securities having a ready market. These were carried at a figure not greater than their market value. In addition, the B of M had $131,225,533.10 in other securities, mainly short-term credits to industry.

$218,011,232.89 was held in cash in the B of M's vaults and on deposit with the Bank of Canada, ready to meet depositors' immediate needs for cash.

IN ALL, THE B of M HAS RESOURCES OF $2,221,630,314.45
TO PAY ALL IT OWES TO DEPOSITORS AND OTHERS AMOUNTING TO . . 2,133,096,232.49
THE B of M'S RESOURCES, OVER AND ABOVE WHAT IS OWED, AMOUNT, THEREFORE, TO . . . . . $ 88,534,081.96

This figure of $88,534,081.96 is made up of money subscribed by the shareholders and, to some extent, of earnings which have from time to time been ploughed back into the business to broaden the Bank's services and to give added protection for the depositors.

1951 EARNINGS

After paying all overhead expenses, including staff salaries, cost-of-living bonuses and benefits, and after making provision for contingencies, and for depreciation of Bank premises, furniture and equipment, the B of M reports earnings for the twelve months ended October 31st, 1951, of $10,356,373.66

Provision for Federal Income Tax and Provincial Taxes	5,001,000.00
Leaving Net Earnings of	$ 5,355,373.66

THIS AMOUNT WAS DISTRIBUTED AS FOLLOWS:

Dividends to Shareholders	$ 4,320,000.00
Balance to Profit and Loss Account . .	$ 1,035,373.66

Add carrots and peas and well-beaten egg. Pour into large glass baking dish, and cover top with pie crust. Bake in a 300-degree oven. Mushrooms may be added to fish if desired. Serve with hot condensed cream of tomato soup as dressing.

Organizes Jews In Alaska

Painting a grim picture of the Alaskan Territory as a land of vast frozen expanses where American GIs were living virtually cut off from wholesome Jewish community contacts and recreational opportunities, S. D. Gershovitz, executive director of the Jewish Welfare Board, who returned to New York from an Alaskan tour, called for the immediate dispatch of an armed services worker "with sound Jewish convictions and the spirit of a pioneer."

Impressed by the primitive conditions he found in a city like Anchorage, where wholesome recreational opportunities are few, Mr. Gershovitz met with the Jewish community numbering 50 families and organized a Jewish community council, the first in Alaska. Covering Fairbanks, which has three Jewish families, and Whittier, a town locked in by mountains and an overhanging glacier, Mr. Gershovitz talked to large numbers of GIs, chaplains, operations and special services officers at Ft. Richardson, Elmendorf, Elelson and Ladd Air Force Bases. Everywhere he heard of the need for recreational facilities and morale programs.

In Anchorage, where the temperature falls to 35 below zero and where 5,000 GIs will be sleeping this winter in tents, because housing has secondary priority, Mr. Gershovitz was confronted by a demand from the few Jewish families for an armed services club and a Jewish Community Center. Recreation for the servicemen, the families informed him, centered about the 72 saloons and honky tonks. A Special Services Club and a YMCA building were "just not enough" to meet the problem of wholesome recreation.

Even more important than the morale needs of those GIs in cities like Anchorage and Fairbanks, which has but three Jewish families, was the situation of those men in radar and air warning stations at isolated posts in Ft. Barrow, Nome, Kodiak and similar stations, who are transported by helicopter and live in complete isolation, receiving all supplies by parachute drops. The JWB director told of the joy recently felt by such an isolated group, when after a drop of a crate of eggs only five were found to be broken.

While in Alaska, Mr. Gershovitz conferred with Chaplain Zuschya Freedman, the only Jewish chaplain in the Territory, and with Robert Bloom, the 73 year-old businessman, who since the last war has served as a one-man JWB committee and whose home served GIs as a center. Mr. Bloom was induced to continue in his old capacity. Zachary Loussac, former mayor of Anchorage, accepted the responsibility of serving as chairman of JWB's Armed Services Committee for the Alaskan Theatre. Mr. Gershovitz was flown to Alaska by Military Air Transport Service on the tour made by arrangement with U. S. Department of Defense.

The Canadian section of the Alaska highway measures 1221 miles from its point of origin at Dawson Creek in British Columbia to its terminus at the Canada-Alaska border.

The Power Of Books

(In Observance Of Jewish Book Month)

There is no gainsaying that after the destruction of the Jewish State by the Romans, Israel succeeded in thriving as a people, not in any particular geographical locality, but in the realm of books. As a result, Israel's kingdom has been the Kingdom of the mind. The Jew, therefore throughout centuries has loved the book. For, verily, the book gave life to Israel, even as Israel in turn gave life to the book.

Israel became profoundly attached to the "sefer" with a passion unlike that found among any other nation. Even as the Jew battled for his life, so the Jewish book engaged in combat on the battlefield. Even as the Jew was burned at the stake, so were Jewish books confiscated and burned in the marketplaces of medieval European cities. One need only turn the pages of history to convince himself of "The Battle of Jewish Books."

For example, what more tragic fate could have befallen any book than the treatment accorded that veritable library of Jewish books known as the Talmud? Yes, the Pfefferkorns, the Frankists, the Eisenmengers thrust their swords at the Talmud. Yes, though Philip the Fair and Pope Julius III ordered wholesale burnings of the Talmudic works, yet the miracle of it all is that the Talmud, even as the people that created it, outlived its traducers and persecutors.

Why need we deal at length with the tragedy of the Jewish book in past centuries when in our own day "the burning of books" has again become common sport? Recall the outrageous burning of books by the Nazi Germans but a few years ago! All the more then that we Jews in these days should hold in reverence the printed word of truth. All the more we must learn to realize the old rabbinic teaching that mightier than the sword is the book.

We, who are the people of the book, managed because of the book, to outlive those who wielded the sword against us. How profoundly meaningful are therefore the words of that great poem of Bialik, "If You Would Know" (the secret of Israel's immortality). Go to the synagogue where, over faded pages, "some shrivelled Jews with parched and wizened faces, Jews of Exile burdened with its yoke, who lose their pain," find their hope and courage in the pages of the Jewish book. Jews today, if they are to recapture beauty and inwardness in their lives, must taste the sweetness of Jewish books, must realize the power of Jewish books.

Judaism And Marriage

"And when she had done giving him drink, she said: 'I will draw for thy camels, also' " (Genesis 24:19)

Abraham, according to the Torah portion for this Sabbath, indicates anxiety regarding his son, Isaac. He is most anxious that his beloved son be united in marriage to one who is a worthy partner. This is the Patriarch's greatest wish. He therefore charges his faithful steward, Eliezer, with the mission to travel to the far country, where dwell his kith and kin and there to find a wife for Isaac. Thus we are introduced to the dramatic and most beautiful story of Rebecca at the well, drawing water for Eliezer, and voluntarily as Rebecca shows concern for the animals so is revealed the maiden's tender heart. Through this act of kindness, Eliezer recognizes that Rebecca is possessed not only of outer beauty, but inward beauty, that of character.

And so we are told that when Isaac took Rebecca in the home of his mother, Sarah, who died, he was "comforted" after the death of his mother. Indeed, Sarah was a good woman and due to her there was a spiritual atmosphere in Abraham's household. The Rabbis point out that when Sarah lived there was a halo around the home, the doors of that home were wide open to strangers, the Sabbath light had a unique radiance. All these disappeared with the death of Sarah.

But when Rebecca came into that home all the precious virtues of hospitality and spirituality were reborn. No wonder that Isaac was comforted by Rebecca because in her he found the reappearance of the lovely virtues which were possessed by his dear mother. Thus Isaac's home in turn had an atmosphere of love and kindliness.

Judaism never looked upon marriage as a compromise with evil, a concession to the lowly instincts. All instincts were looked upon as normal and healthy to life and given by God and were only to be properly channelled and spiritualized. Hence, celibacy was never favoured among our people. Judaism sanctified marriage and called it Kiddushin, a consecration of the highest which made for purity in life and action. In Judaism marriage was characterized for the most part as a union of souls and upon this union there has ever rested the hope of humanity and civilization. Therefore, in our tradition the day of marriage was a semi-Yom Kippur, a day spent in meditation, reflection, and fasting and in proper preparation for this, the holiest relationship in human life.

It must be here underscored, that happiness in the marriage state was to be earned and not just to be had with the day of marriage. For marriage is a struggle in adjustment, an experiment in unselfishness, an adventure in self-sacrificing love, a discipline in patience. Despite the pessimists, the institution of marriage is far from bankrupt. Millions of youths with radiant faces continue to ascent the marriage altar and vow their lives to another, in faith and in confidence.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.
